One of the most devastating aspects of history of the Indian Residential Schools in Canada is the number of children who died in residential schools.

Project of the Heart* is the opportunity to honour an Indian Residential School survivor or to pay tribute to and commemorate the life of a child who died in residential schools.

Directions:

If you are honouring a Survivor of Indian Residential Schools:

Using the following link:

<https://legacyofhope.ca/wherearethechildren/stories/>

1. select a Residential School Survivor and listen to their story
2. next, design a tile with any image, word or a combination of images and words that you want to use to honour and respect a survivor of the Indian Residential Schools
3. choose a colour (anything but black or white) and colour the edges of your tile
4. clearly print the name of the survivor and the name of the school they attended on the back of the tile

If you are creating a memorial for a child who died in residential school:

1. use Google to search for and learn details about a child who has passed
2. now, design a tile with any image, word or a combination of images and words that you want to use to honour, respect and commemorate a child who attended an Indian Residential School
3. colour the edges of your tile black
4. clearly print the name of the child and the school they attended on the back of the tile

Next:

In paragraph format, write a brief background summary of the person you are honouring or paying tribute to in memory.

In addition, provide a thoughtful and thorough 250-word description of your tile explaining your design and colour choice.

Be sure to type this component of the assignment and paperclip your tile to it for submission.
